A.1 Books, papers, technical reports:

Arditi, D., G. T. Akan, and S. Gurdamar. 1985. "Cost Overruns in Public Projects." International Journal of Project Management. Elsevier Science Ltd.: 3(4), 218-224.

The authors present results of a survey of public agencies and contractors in Turkey to identify the sources of cost overruns on projects executed between 1970 and 1980. They concluded that the most important sources of cost overruns are inflationary pressures, cost underestimation or errors, increase in material and labor costs, and construction delays.

Booz Allen Hamilton (Schneck, D. C.). 1991. "Light Rail Transit Capital Cost Study." UMTA-MD-08-7001. Washington, DC: U.S. Department of Transportation.

Booz Allen Hamilton, a consulting firm that worked on several transit projects, reported actual costs of five light rail system projects. The objectives included an examination of unit costs that could be used in the planning and conceptual estimating for future similar projects. The report did not attempt to evaluate or explain the unit cost variances among the systems or compare the estimated and actual costs.

Booz Allen Hamilton (Schneck, D. C. and R. Amodei). 1994. "Fixed Guideway Capital Costs -- Heavy Rail and Busway/HOV." Federal Transit Administration.

This report provides a detailed documentation of the component-level or project element-level capital costs typically experienced in the development of major capital heavy rail and busway/high occupancy vehicle lane transit projects.

Booz Allen Hamilton (Schneck, D. C. and R. Laver). 2003. "Light Rail Transit Capital Cost Study Update." Federal Transit Administration.

This report provides a detailed documentation of the component-level or project element-level capital costs typically experienced in the development of major capital light rail transit projects. The resulting normalized cost estimates and unit cost ranges were used to develop a capital cost estimation model to help project developers better estimate the capital costs of future light rail projects at every stage of the major capital investment planning and development process.
